Beating The King S Indian

The King's Indian and the Grünfeld are two of Black's most popular answers to 1 d4; unsurprising given that they were long-time favourites of legends Garry Kasparov and, before him, Bobby Fischer. Brimming with complexity and dynamism, these two openings often leave those who play them scratching their heads wondering how to squeeze even ...

The King's Indian Attack (KIA) is actually more of a system for White which can be used against different openings, and not an opening. White will place his pieces in a certain way no matter what Black plays at first. This setup is actually inspired in the King's Indian Defense. White places his pieces in the same way as Black would in that opening, however, Black's position in the KIA is often very different from White's position in the King's Indian Defense.

The Four Pawns Attack in the King's Indian Defence is a chess opening that begins with the moves: 1. d4 Nf6 2. c4 g6 3. Nc3 Bg7 4. e4. White immediately builds up a large pawn centre in order to gain a spatial advantage. Black first develops his pieces, then tries to attack White's centre by means of the pawn advances...e7-e5,...c7-c5 or...f7-f5, depending on circumstances. This formation has never attracted serious interest in serious play, although Alexander Alekhine used ...

King's Indian Defence, Four Pawns Attack - Wikipedia

Probably nothing. The King's Indian Defense has a well-deserved reputation of spectacular battles often terminated with a massacre on the kingside castle. The philosophy behind this defense has always been the same, black plays a kingside fianchetto regardless of what white does. When he attacks the center and depending on what kind of pawn structure arises black will attack one flank or the other, but the goal is the

The King's Indian Defense is one of the most popular openings employed by Black against 1.d4. To a move with which white usually invites tactical and positional play, black responds with a set-up that most of the times lead to attacks against the white king. It is no secret that the King's Indian Defense is normally employed by players who like to attack and are not afraid of complications.

Kings Indian Attack The Kings Indian Attack is only for WHITE and for players with good positional understanding. Some experienced positional players I know, who don't have the time to learn lots of opening theory, play first move Nf3 (then g3, Bg2, and d3) and go for the King's Indian Attack, which is called The Kings Indian Attack.

We continue with our "theme" of pet lines in the King's Indian, but this time it's White's turn to surprise. GM Finegold shows a pair of games starting with an early Bf4, a move that "you are sure to know better than your opponent." In one case, Black continues normally. In the other, Black chooses a variation that seems seemingly...
